

Specialist Property firm choose emis intellectual technology

Date: 25th April 2006

Specialist Wimbledon based property solicitors Ashworths have chosen emis intellectual technology and their integrated Seneca solution to help manage an increasing case load as well as all other activities within the firm.

The technology will bring an integrated approach to case management, dictation and the firms accounting functions.

Ashworths are not new to using the latest technology to deliver quality and effective client service.

Brendan Dean of Ashworths said:

"We have always used the very latest technology and choosing Seneca is a further indication of where we are taking the firm and our clients."

"By integrating technologies that have traditionally been standalone into one system we can focus on our firm and our clients instead of our IT".

Chris Spencer development director of emis intellectual technology commented:

"Brendan and the team are part of a new breed of solicitors who are really seeking differentiable competitive advantage through technology. By using centralised information in real time, as a result of our totally integrated approach, Ashworths will be able to make rapid client and business decisions in an environment that is becoming quicker and quicker"

Ashworths go live with Seneca in April across all the firm's staff.
